Dead

We regret to state that the apprehensions express by the physicians on Wednesday evening, have proved true, and Mr. John A. Dubernard, who was so badly bitten by the dog of Mr. Roszell, on Saturday last, now lies dead. He expired at his residence, in High street, yesterday morning. Mr. D. was a native of France, but has been a resident of Baltimore about fifty years. He was much esteemed by those who knew him. His death is a melancholy comment upon the impolicy, we might almost say the criminality of keeping dogs, so ferocious in their character as this one was, in the yards of private dwellings. The bull terrier, and this dog was one of that species, is perhaps the very worst description of dog with which we are beset in our community. They are always fierce, and it is a rare circumstance that even their masters have control over them—when they once take hold, death has been frequently found necessary to make them loosen their grasp. Such animals should never be kept in the yards of private dwellings.—
